POLYMER VERSUS ELASTOMER

A polymer is a macromolecule that is composed of a large number of repeating units

An elastomer is a type of polymer having the specific characteristic feature of elasticity

Have different physical properties depending on their structures

Have the unique physical property of elasticity

Morphology varies from crystalline to amorphous structures

Amorphous polymers

Can rupture when a pressure is applied

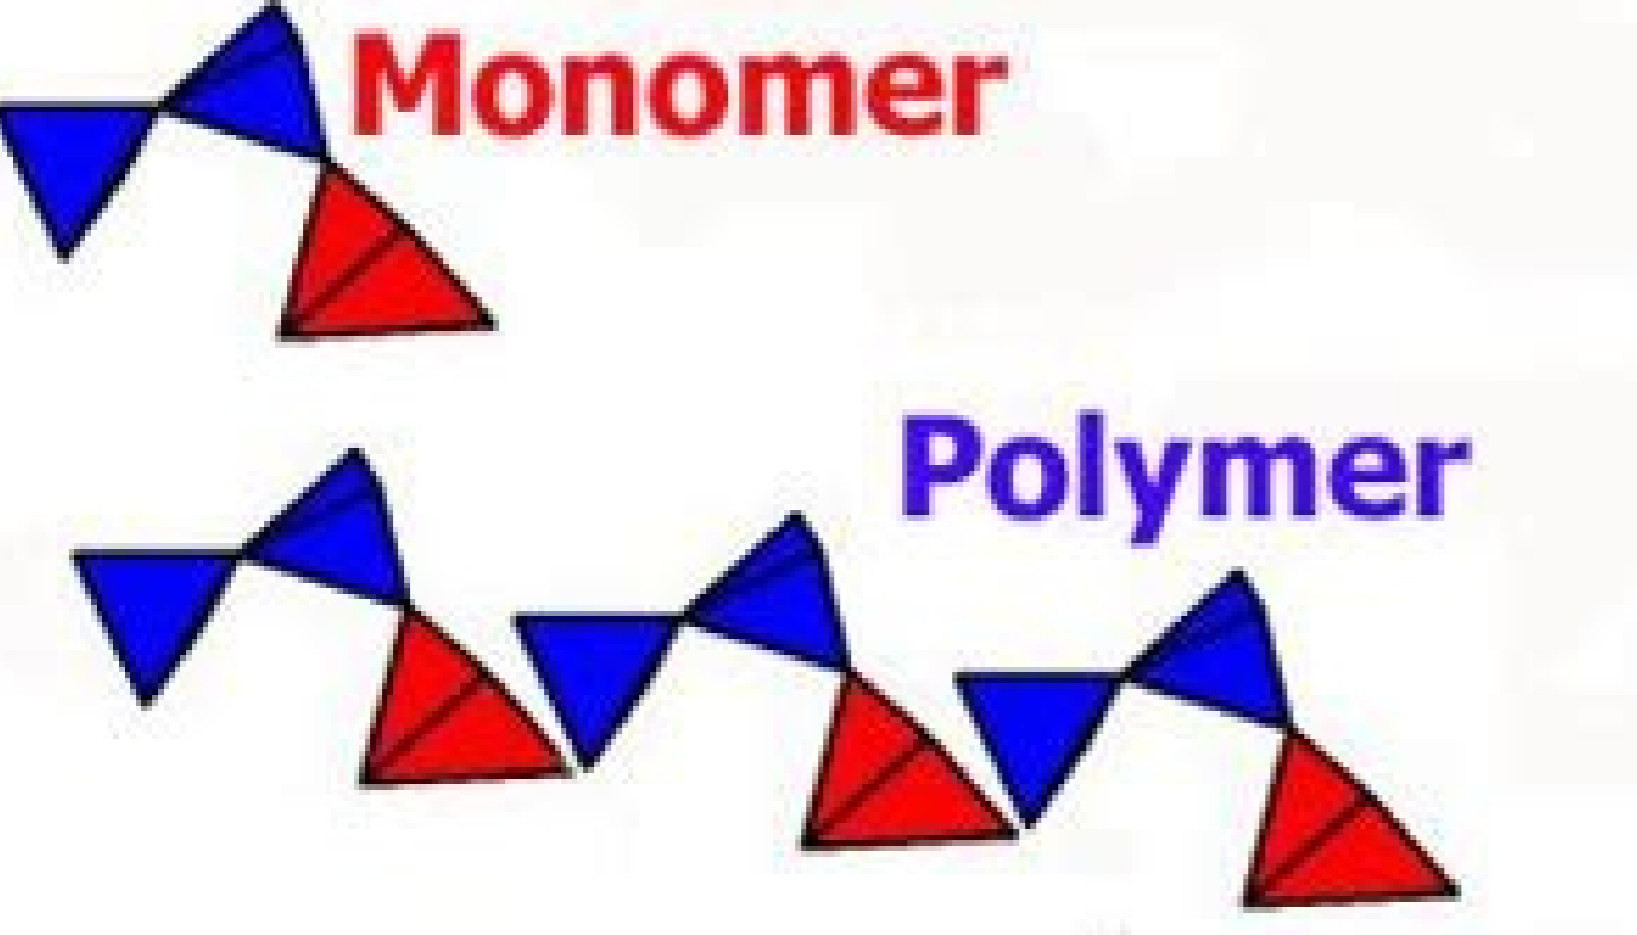

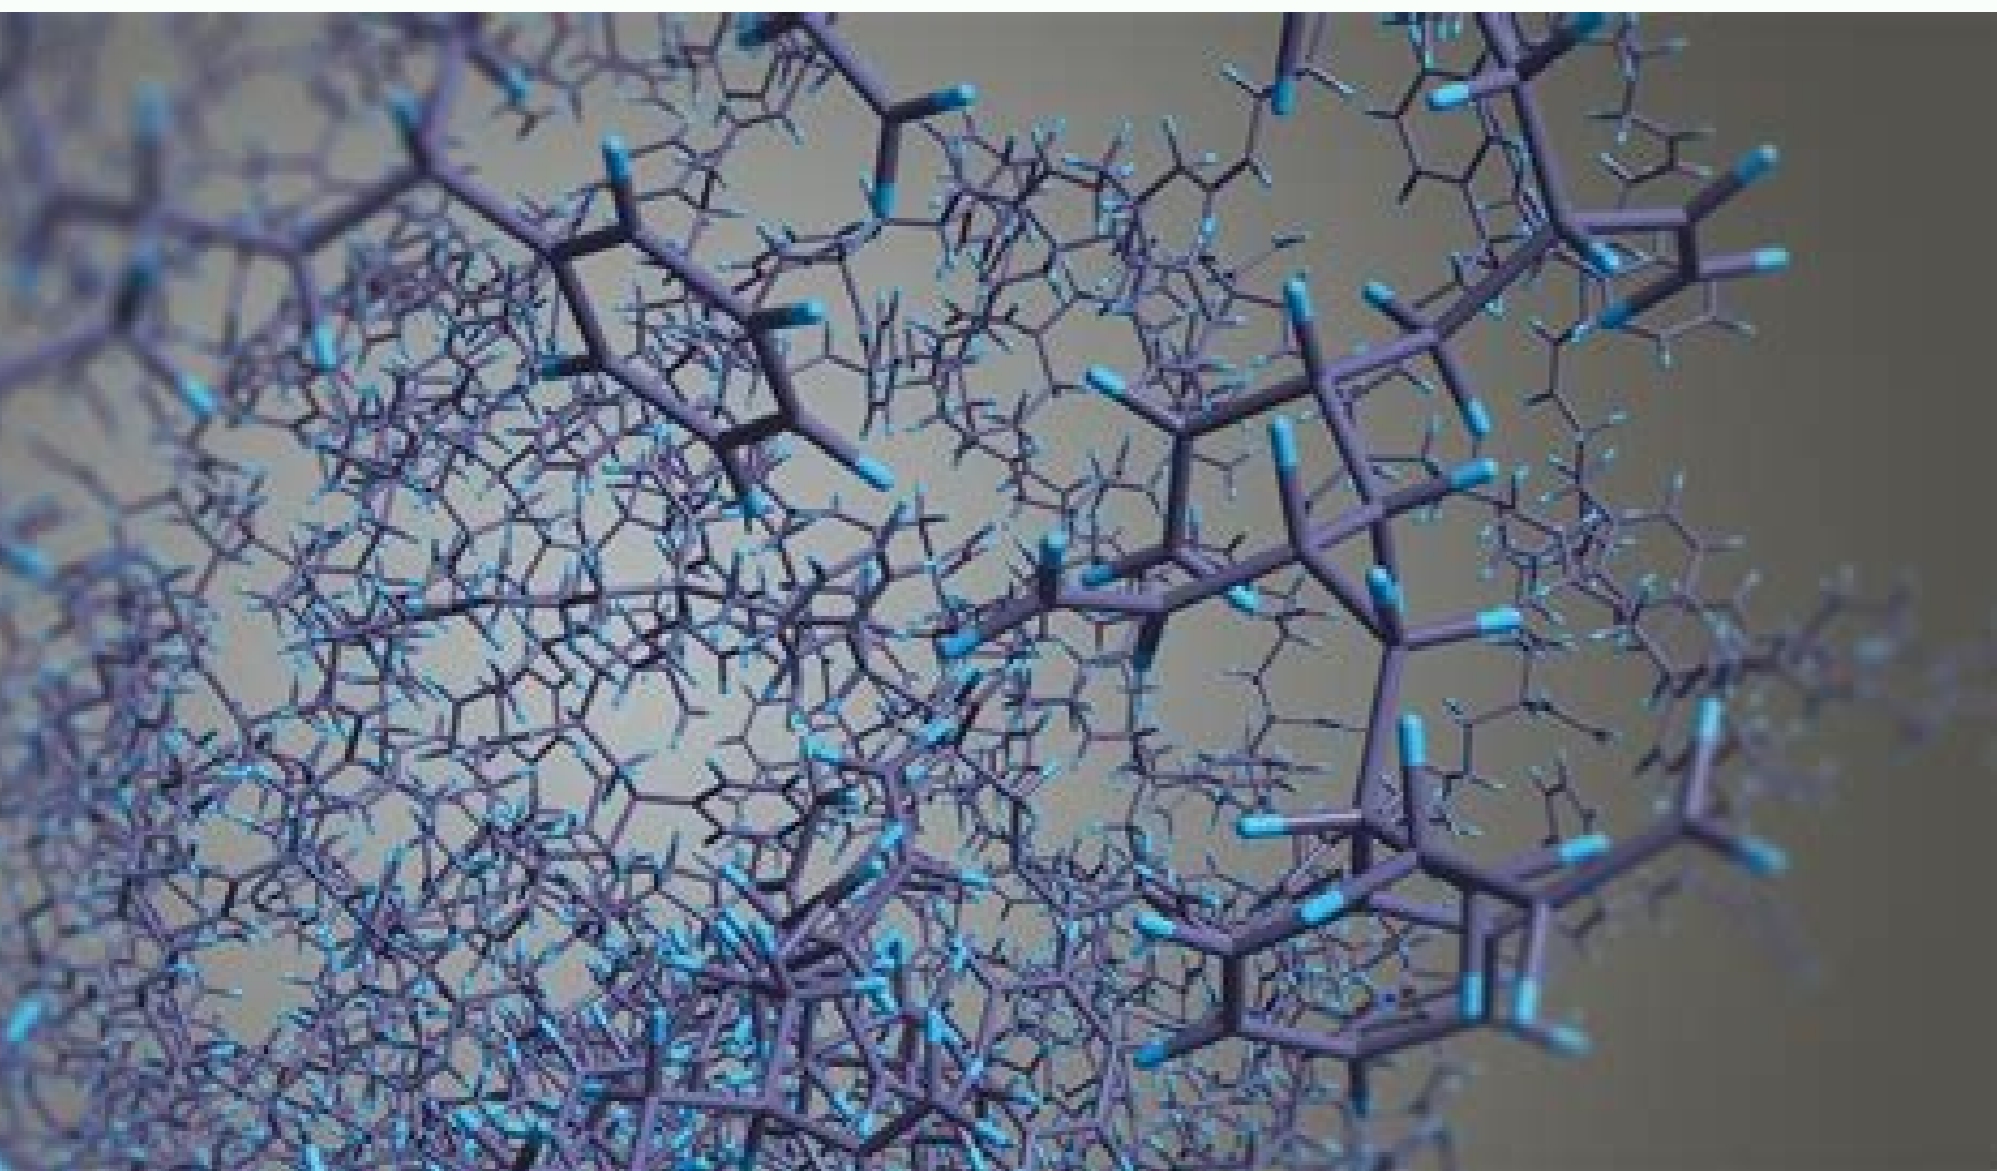

Can withstand high pressures due to elasticity

Most except elastomers are stiff and rigid

Flexible

Group	Chemical Formula	Structure	Monomer	Example	Function
Carbohydrate	$(C_6H_{12}O_6)_n$	Linear, branched, or cyclic	Glucose	Starch, Cellulose, Glycogen	Energy storage
Protein	$(C_2H_5O_2N)_n$	Linear, branched, or cyclic	Amino acids	Enzymes, Antibodies, Hormones	Structural, Catalytic, Signaling
Nucleic Acid	$(C_5H_{10}O_4N_2P)_n$	Linear	Nucleotides	DNA, RNA	Genetic information storage and transfer

MONOMERIC VINYL VERSUS POLYMERIC VINYL

Monomeric vinyl is the monomer from which a particular vinyl polymer is built	Polymeric vinyl is the repeating unit of a vinyl polymer
Has a double bond between two carbon atoms	Has no double bond between two carbon atoms
Has a sp <sup>2</sup> hybridized carbon	Has a sp <sup>3</sup> hybridized carbon
Single molecules and do not give any details about the polymer chains it can form	Gives details on the chain length
Not a repeating unit	Represents a repeating unit
Unsaturation is present	Unsaturation is absent between two carbon atoms but can be present in side groups

Monomer polymer worksheet answer key.

They are all similar in that they are made up of molecules that are repeated over and over in a chain called a polymer. Thank you so much for your cooperation. Plastic products are all around us. For example, the name "Polystyrene" (which StyroFoam® is made of) means many ("poles") of "styrene", which is the monomer of this polymer. In this lesson plan, students will conduct their own polymerization experiment and use hot milk, vinegar, a cup, paper towels and a spoon to make their own casein. It has been used to make buttons, decorative buckles, beads and other jewelry, fountain pens, holders for hand mirrors and fancy combs and sets of brushes (figure 2). A collective key property of all plastics is that they can be shaped into many shapes. The name of the plastic also provides information about its chemical structure. In a polymer, a single repetition of the molecular pattern is called a monomer (even if the polymer is composed of only one type of molecule). From the early 1900s until 1945, Galalith, a plastic casein made with chemical formaldehyde, was quite common. There are many types of polymers, each with a different look or appearance depending on what they are made of. Every casein molecule is a monomer and the chain of casein monomers is a polymer - a natural plastic is created! The polymer can be harvested and shaped, which is why the plastic made of milk is called Casein Plastic. What does milk have to do with polymers? In addition to water, fat and lactose, milk contains many proteins called Casein (Case-Een). Polypropylene (PP), on the other hand, is made with many repeated units of propylene. Normally, caseins form spherical shapes to remain in solution, but these spheres can be easily modified, and once changed, they do not be reformed in spheres. Polymers can be chains of a type of molecule or chains of different types of molecules connected together in a regular model as shown in figure figure How different plastics behave and what products they are used for depends on the molecules they are made of. In order to continue to enjoy our site, we ask you to confirm your identity as a human being. For example, when milk is heated and combined with an acid, such as vinegar, the casein molecules undergo polymerization and unfold in long chains, forming curd. The manufacturing process of a polymer is called polymerization, which describes the transformation of many individual monomeric molecules into large chains or three-dimensional networks. Synthetic polymers are man-made and derived from materials such as oil, while natural polymers are naturally found and made of renewable materials such as cellulose from wood or starch.
